

Motivation Letter – Master in Finance

Dear Admissions Committee,

Since I was a child, I have always been fascinated by the world of finance. I still remember accompanying my father to meetings with his financial advisor: while he discussed investments, I would stare at the charts and numbers, intrigued by a universe I did not yet understand. That early curiosity has now evolved into a genuine passion—one that I am determined to pursue at the highest academic and professional level.

Today, as a Business Administration student at the University of Bologna, I have been able to transform that childhood fascination into concrete knowledge. Courses in corporate finance, economics, and statistics have allowed me to combine my love for mathematics with my analytical mindset, while my six-month internship at Mediobanca Premier gave me the opportunity to experience first-hand the dynamism and complexity of financial markets. Working alongside financial advisors and collaborating on portfolio strategies taught me the importance of precision, discipline, and teamwork—values that I also developed throughout my years as a competitive swimmer at the national level.

Sport has always been a central part of who I am. Competing taught me resilience, time management, and focus, while my later transition to Muay Thai helped me rediscover perseverance and discipline after a shoulder injury forced me to stop swimming. These experiences have shaped my character: I am determined, energetic, and fully committed to achieving my goals once I set them.

Beyond academics and sport, I am deeply curious about the world. I have been fortunate to travel extensively—from Asia to Africa to Northern Europe—which has broadened my cultural perspective and reinforced my belief in the value of global education. I see finance not just as a technical field, but as an international language that connects people, ideas, and opportunities across borders.

I am confident that the Master in Finance would provide the ideal environment to further develop my analytical and leadership skills, deepen my understanding of financial markets, and prepare me for a long-term career in investment management or corporate finance. I am eager to learn from world-class professors, collaborate with ambitious peers, and contribute to a community driven by excellence, innovation, and diversity.

Thank you for considering my application. I look forward to the opportunity to contribute my enthusiasm, discipline, and determination to your program.

Yours sincerely,
Christian Negri
